

In-Between Places

Angie Zimmerman

September 19 - 28, 2011

---

A liminal place is a place that is in-between or on the threshold. When recreating a place that exists there is some distortion or deconstructing of what the place means or how it is visually represented. Angie Zimmerman's In-Between Places is a display of drawings and small photographic paper models that create a mapping of a journey from memory of one place to an introduction of a new place. The liminal space is where the artist feels like she is physically or mentally in both places at once, in neither of the two, or in the blurry in-between. Angie's method of mapping uses the blank, white gallery walls as a canvas on which to create paths where images leave the picture frames and venture out on their own to find a destination. Angie has gathered inspiration from her hometown of Plymouth, Wisconsin and her new home of Tucson, Arizona
