

Subject line: We're confused ... have we pissed you off? (Email #27)

(Optional Short hand copying start)

Ian,

So here's the confusing thing...

You've rolled through our entire 30 day email sequence for TLB.

But you haven't joined our flagship training program.

We're scratching our heads a little.

Have we perhaps pissed you off (let us know if we have)?

(Optional Stop Copying here). Now would be the time to transition into a survey...or it could be done at the bottom.

Here's the way we see it...

The $49.95/mo (for 7 months) price for TLB is really irrelevant.

In much the same way as a $10,000 investment is irrelevant when the 12-month return is $20K.

I mean ... how many wads of $10K would you give Warren Buffett if he said he would give you back $20K in 12 months time for each $10K bundle of Benjamin Franklin's?

Stupid question really, because you'd round up as much cash as you could and hand it over without a second thought.

No question.

I guess we're just a little less credible than Warren Buffett, eh? :)

But here's the kicker...

See's Candies is said to have been one of Buffett's best investments ever.

Berkshire Hathaway purchased See's Candies in 1972 for $25 million. And Between 1972 and 2006 (34 years) it had returned over 2,000%.

2,000% in 34 years, eh?

Not bad.

But not brilliant either.

Huh?

Well ... in January Sean joined TLB.

He was still in his first month's training when he applied just one of the concepts we teach (the badass ninja market research).

Result? ...

Cha-ching! ... $3K in the bank.

Lemme do the math for you. That's a little over a 6,000% ROI.

Or put another way, 3x better than one of Buffett's best investments ever. And it didn't take 34 damn years either...

More like 2 weeks.

Go figure.

TLB is the best (and safest) investment you'll ever make if you have the determination to follow instructions and do what it takes.
