

Subject line: THIS song gets you almost any woman

I hate country music.

There are literally a few songs that I can tolerate and the rest are crap.

However, last night I was working out with my buddy when he said "Dude, you gotta hear this song, I know you hate country but you'll love it. It's pretty much exactly what you were talking about the other day."

The song is called "Hey Girl" by Billy Currington. Maybe you've heard of it, maybe you haven't.

Either way, the lyrics are clutch. Here's the opening paragraph.

"Hey girl, what's your name girl
I've been lookin' at you
And every guy here's doin' the same girl
It'd be a shame girl
If I let you just walk on by
'Cause I'm all caught up in your sweet smile
A girl like you comes around once in a while
So hot, gotta give it a shot
Gotta get get a little bit of what you got"

Can't deny the truth in those lines.

On those days/nights where I feel some approach anxiety creep up this is something I think about. The shame of leaving without having said anything is far greater than the shame of being rejected.

The old saying goes "I don't regret the things I've done, but the things I didn't do."

I like to pretend that today is the last day of my life...and if I looked back on my life tomorrow, would I regret not approaching a beautiful woman...or would I be happy that I gave into my fear?

Definitely the first one. Fear is not real. It is a product of our thoughts of the future.

I have no desire to live with regrets. That's why I don't like to overcomplicate things. I keep it simple.

That's why I like this other line from the song:

"You're lookin' so fine, got me all tongue tied
And the only line I can think to say is Hey girl"

If I ever find myself wanting to talk to a girl but not knowing what to say then I just walk up at that exact moment and say "Hi, my name's Ian. What's your name?"

I know that's not sexy. It's not "the perfect line." But guess what? It has literally worked every single time for me at opening a conversation except ONCE. And that was in a club in Manchester where she could barely hear me. I'll take those odds of a 99.9% success rate.

There is a little-known way to find the "perfect line" for YOU. It's something Brian and I call the "no-mind" approach. We teach you how to do it in our program...
