New Food Protection Manager Certification Exam

We are proud to announce that the StateFoodSafety.com Food Protection Manager Certification Exam will be released nationwide in April 2017.

Accreditation Number 1020

What Is the Food Protection Manager Certification Exam?

Passing the Food Protection Manager Certification Exam earns examinees the Food Safety Manager Certification credential, which meets all food safety manager requirements. Passing this exam communicates to the food service and retail industry that one has the knowledge, skills, and abilities necessary to oversee the safe storage, preparation, and service of food in the workplace. Most environmental and regulatory bodies across the United States require at least one Certified Food Safety Manager per food service location.

Until now, the only companies that offered an ANSI-accredited and nationally approved Food Protection Manager Certification Exam were ServSafe, Prometric, NRFSP, and Learn2Serve. StateFoodSafety.com is now the fifth provider to offer an equivalent exam that meets ANSI's accreditation standards and provides legitimate Food Safety Manager Certification.

How Food Managers Become Certified

To become certified, food managers must take and pass the ANSI-accredited Food Protection Manager Certification Exam. During the completion of this exam, a proctor must be present to monitor the performance of an examinee.

Once an individual passes the exam, he or she will receive a certificate which will validate his or her Food Safety Manager Certification. This certificate will be used to verify the presence of a Certified Food Safety Manager at the food service location by health inspectors, auditors, and the general public.
