In the foreground, there is a small sign on a stick that reads "You're an expert at writing software. How do you find the best projects?". The sign also features a small illustration of a cat in a space suit.

You're an expert at writing software. How do you find the best projects?

The most desirable employers in town aren't always able to discover the most talented developers on their own, which is why they trust us to help.

You've expended a lot of effort to become a professional software developer, and there's a demand for what you do. Assembly understands what software development is, and what the pain points are on projects and with clients. We know that years of experience is as bad an indicator of skill as lines of code are for productivity, scrum masters assigned to 10 projects is bad, and being forced to use a 2010 Lenovo is not a good way to save a dollar.

We're designed to help amplify your signal amongst the noise of resumes out there, and sift through projects to ensure anything we present to you is worth your time. You're looking for a job that works for your particular skills and needs: you're smart, driven, and confident you can deliver best-in-class solutions and immediately have an effect on an application's development process.

Because you want to focus on what you do best, in addition to marketing your skills also offer office space in Assembly, contract and invoicing assistance so you don't have to chase clients that don't pay or offer bad terms, and project and account management assistance where needed.

Contact us to discuss your skills and how we can help.
