

Spelling Workbook

Level 2

TO THE TEACHERS:

This curriculum has been designed to enhance the student's spelling and vocabulary skills for the purpose of correctly writing, using, and spelling words used in everyday conversation as well as subject matters in other courses of learning.

Each spelling lesson contains a list of words and four exercises requiring students to use the word in correct context, a word puzzle/game and space to practice writing the unit words. A test should be given after each unit is completed to assess the student's capabilities to correctly spell the words in each particular unit.

Tests and an answer key are provided in the back of the workbook.

LESSON #1: CH and SH Digraphs

A consonant digraph is a sound made by putting two consonants together to make one new sound. Two of the most often-used blends are ch and sh. Ch and sh are used at the beginning and at the end of many words we use every day. Sometimes the ch and sh blend can be in the middle of a word, too.

CH

The ch digraph makes a “t + sh” sound. You make the ch sound by putting your tongue on the roof of your mouth just behind your top front teeth. Your lips also make a ‘kissy face’.

Practice the ch sound by saying “cherry” five times. Where is your tongue? Are your top and bottom teeth touching? What shape are you making with your lips?

SH

When you put your top and bottom side teeth together, your lips will make a little circle. When you push air out of that little circle without moving your teeth, you will make the sh sound.

Say “shoe” several times. Where are your teeth? Can you feel the little circle your lips are making?

Your spelling words for this week all have the ch or sh blend.

LESSON #2: GH and TH Digraphs

A consonant digraph is a sound made by putting two consonants together to make one new sound. Two of the most often-used blends are gh and th. Gh and th are used at the beginning and at the end of many words we use every day. Sometimes the gh and th blend can be in the middle of a word, too.

gh

The gh digraph is a tricky one. It is tricky because it has different sounds depending on where it is found in a word.

If the gh is at the beginning of a word, the g is a hard g sound.

Example: ghost

If the gh is at the end of a word, it is either silent or makes the sound of f.

Example: through (silent)

Example: cough (f)

If the gh is in a compound word, it makes the sound of its root word.

Example: throughout (silent)

Example: roughneck (f)

th

The th digraph blends the soft t sound with the h. The th sound is one we use many times each day. Examples: the, they, think, either

This week's spelling words are words using the gh and th digraphs.

LESSON #3: Silent k, g, and ph as f

The English language gets its words from many other languages. Latin, Greek, and an old style of English used hundreds of years ago are the three main languages our language comes from.

When the Pilgrims and explorers from all parts of the world traveled across the ocean to America, they had to learn to communicate with one another. Sometimes this meant learning to speak and understand different languages.

As the early settlers in our country learned to speak new languages they sometimes changed the way they pronounced some of the new words they were learning. This is why we have words with a silent k, a silent g, and why the ph digraph sounds like f.

k

The k is always silent when followed by the letter n.

g

g is silent when used in front of the following letters: m, n, l

All English words that come from the Greek language use a ph in place of f because the Greek language uses ph instead of f. If a word comes from another language such as French or German, an f is used for the f sounds.

Words using ph for f are sight words since no other rules apply.
