Ninth week in the series: JOSEPH
Genesis 43

In Genesis 43, the members of Jacob's fractured family somehow are changing for the better. What can we learn from them so that we too can change for the better?

Discussion Questions:

1. In Genesis 43, God uses other people to create openings for the people in the narrative to think and act differently. How do you think your involvement with other people has created opportunities for you to think and act differently?
2. Who has inspired you to think and act differently? How did they do it?
3. How do you respond to these words from M. Craig Barnes? "After years and years of directing flashy church programs and speaking at more conferences than I can remember, I am convinced that sustained transformation of human lives occurs best through these small circles of Bible study that meet in living rooms, dorms, conference rooms, and coffee shops all over the world."
4. What steps do you think you might take to involve yourself with people and look for openings God creates for you to think and act differently?
