

To my co-workers, friends, and family in Christ:

I am writing to formally let you know that my last day at the Archdiocese will be Friday, March 6th. I will be working part-time (more on that later), and spending much-anticipated time with my kiddos at home.

I feel privileged to say that it has been close to five years since I started working at the Archdiocese of Indianapolis. Many of you know that I was born and raised in Birmingham, Alabama, and I arrived to ArchIndy in July 2021 freshly married and never having been to Indy before. To say that people welcomed me was an understatement! That first year away from family (and the South, let's be honest) was hard, but it would have felt impossible without many of the connections and relationships I made through the young adult community in Indianapolis and the incredible people I work with at the Archdiocese.

To everyone who hosted Zack and I for dinner, met me for coffee, or hopped on a phone call, thank you sincerely for your hospitality and your time.

So what's next? I am thrilled to share that I will be working part-time as a floral designer at Flower Boys in the Fletcher Place neighborhood of Indianapolis! I first started moonlighting in the floral industry in college and could not be more giddy to be back with my flowers, and gaining an extra day at home with my kiddos to boot.

Recently in the car, my three-year-old John asked me, "Why do we have to die?" As we drove, I had the opportunity to share the Gospel with him in an explicit way. I told him that we had disobeyed God, but that He loved us so much that He sent Jesus to make a way for us to be with Him forever in Heaven. It was an extremely special moment, but after, I was moved to tears thinking about how grateful I am for all the formation I have received in my time working in ministry. Because of my formation, I was ready to share the Gospel with my son! Working in ministry can be a challenge (IYKYK), but the Lord generously gives us these little moments to show us just how much it's worth the work.

Please know of my prayers for you, and please pray for our family in this transition! My phone number is below if you would like to keep up with me or to receive our family newsletters via email.

In Christ,
