So what do women really have to do to get things to change in Australia well if only if only on you tell me I needed to have any law tell us I think look there are those who like you that affirmative action and I was we've seen in the Labour Party when they established sort of female quotas that had a really clearly positive impact on the number of female politicians there were there are those who are very opposed to the notion of affirmative action because it's somehow under undermines the credibility of any woman who makes it into a position of power and that maybe there is something to be said in in Julia Gillard's notion that you just have to change the images in people's heads they just need to see them there and then it becomes the more palatable reality this may be true I think it's confronting to think at all or say it but I think we can affect a lot of changes on the level of our own lives tune in what we demand of ourselves in demand over other men folk and what we teach our daughters and what we what we say is acceptable what we let what we let go by you know in that in that YouTube clip of general Morrison was it you know he made some remark about about that what you can you remember that remark was it was about basically was about and it's the same thing like you know you're sitting in a restaurant and you see Nigella Lawson getting strangled by her husband do you step in or do you just let it go by and by stepping in and saying no this is not right are you again deploying that that terrible gender card and now that's clearly an extreme example but there are many small examples I think in our daily lives now I was giving a talk a couple of weeks ago at the Sydney writers festival and at the end it was about motherhood memoirs and I've written a custom term papers no speaking to Monica ducks who's written a terrific motherhood memoir and at the end of it a woman put up her hand and she said yes but what are we going to do about it the men just expect us to do everything and I'm going away for the weekend and I've just done all the cooking and I've put it in the freezer what are we going to do about it I just thought well get him to do some cooking you know and maybe it's clearly it's not always that easy and people were in in bad relationships and and and so on but but I think we also have to make demands of of the other people around us and of the men around us and ask how we're living our lives and if we're really living those feminist ideals or or not on a personal level now some will say that mmm someone say that's blaming the victim I don't think it is I think and I think we're talking about the culture and the culture is our shared project at the back good evening and thanks very much for a great conversation I've really enjoyed your perspective particularly on Julia Gillard's prime ministership I was just wondering given the turmoil that she's endured over the last number of years how do you feel history will look back on her prime ministership because yep she did a lot of great things in her time and you know as this whole situation washes through I'd be interested to know what your thoughts might be just how we look back on her prime ministership yeah well I had a sense of it and maybe it's my own wishful thinking but as she was delivering that that very beautiful and to my mind very moving and gracious speech of concession I sort of felt I had a vision of her in in posterity and and I my own feeling is that history is only going to smile upon her in all sorts of ways just down the front here Thanks I just wanted to bring up the this ridiculous situation that happened about the knitting and what we can do about that and what is your you know what are your thoughts about how we can deal with that absurd continuing its what we like what anyone wants to do their own voice yeah I think everyone's entitled to their own hobbies I think it's a funny thing with Julia Gillard I think she was so sort of she became
