The picture above shows a mural painted on the Automatic Lofts by Ricard Haas, an artist who trained with Frank-Lloyd-Wright. Haas applied trompe l'oeil details to the mural on what was then called the Reliable Building, which was commissioned by the Reliable Corp. in 1984. There he paid tribute to Daniel Burnham and his unrealized 1909 Civic Center Plan, which would have been built on the site occupied by the mural.

History of Automatic Lofts

Listed on the National Register of Historic Places as the “Automatic Electric Company” building.

Automatic Electric was founded as Strowger Automatic Telephone Exchange Co. by Kansas City resident Almon Strowger, who invented the first automatic (dial) telephone switch in 1889. For decades AE was a leading supplier of telephone equipment to independent (non-Bell) telephone companies across the U.S. The company also at various times supplied switching and other equipment to the Bell System.

The Strowger Switch is the fundamental element behind every modern day telephone system.

The Automatic Electric Company, which Almon Strowger helped create, was acquired by General Telephone & Electric (GT&E) in 1955.
