BY YOUR SIDE

Established by Esther Schulze-Tsatsas and Dimitrios Tsatsas in 2012, the Tsatsas label operates from the same atelier in Offenbach am Main, Germany, where Dimitrios's father has produced fine leather goods for more than 30 years. The pair now combine this traditional knowledge with contemporary design to make their sleek bags. Their latest creation is the Lato: so named because in Italian, lato means "the side" or "on the side," which is how you access the contents of this slouchy bag. Rather than having a top opening, the Lato has inserts on either side of the handle. The lightweight bag is handcrafted from 100 percent lamb napa leather, and each one is individualized with a serial number.

Budding genius

There's a definite Pop Art sensibility to Atrafloor's new Floral collection. As the name suggests, the designs are inspired by blossoms and blooms and include Cornucopia, an almost cartoon-like pattern in deep navy and mustard, which originated as a hand-painted motif by one of Atrafloor's designers. Outside, meanwhile, features a dainty assortment of flowers in cyan, aqua, and orange. Other designs include the stylized, graphic Leaf, and the darker Midnight, with delicate pink and white roses set against an almost black base. All prints are custom ordered and have a four- to six-week shipping time.

IN THE MOMENT

"Everything is so fast these days," says Taylor Patterson, "but flowers make me feel present. When I have flowers in my home, they help me embrace the moments." Patterson is helping her customers to do the same with the launch of a space in Brooklyn, New York, which opened its doors on Valentine's Day. Fox Fodder Farm, named after Patterson's family farm in Delaware, offers a range of locally sourced buds that can be bought individually or in bunches, along with her eye-catching and architectural bouquets, which regularly appear in the boutiques of Carolina Herrera and Ulla Johnson. And if you're not in the neighborhood, you can, of course, order a bouquet online, or subscribe so that your vases are never empty. The subscription service, says Patterson, "allows us to customize the flowers to our clients' tastes and to curate their space. We have a client who told us she started reading more once we put an arrangement by a chair in the corner. That made me happy."

TALES OF THE CITY

Enamored by the awe-inspiring architecture, vibrant flora, and beguiling culture of Seville, heritage British brand Cole & Son has taken inspiration from the city for its new range of bold and beautiful wallpapers. The Andalusian capital's Phoenician, Roman, Islamic, and Christian influences are visible in the intricate patterns on the walls of Mudéjar palaces and the gothic design of the cathedral. Such diversity is reflected in this eclectic collection, which features 17 designs that take in everything from flower-strewn trompe l'oeil balconies bursting with color, to tile-inspired geometric motifs, and flamenco dancers radiating the passion of Spain's musical heritage. There's even the option of recreating the palace gardens of the 13th-century Royal Alcázar of Seville, a stylized wonder in which peacocks and emerald-hued parrots make the manicured grounds their playground, offering an Iberian paradise anywhere in the world.

Style

Equal footing

"I love flat shoes, more so than heels," declared the model Twiggy in her 1960s heyday. Had Ops & Ops been around back then, the Londoner might just have namechecked them. Created by American/Brit duo Teri Olins and Steph Jones, the shoes are inspired by designs from the Swinging Sixties and came about when they couldn't find a flat that worked as well in the office as it did in the after-work restaurant or dancefloor. Handmade in Portugal, the shoes come in a range of colors and finishes, from high-gloss crimson and avocado patent to metallic purple and silver. The latest campaign, seen here, was inspired by the work of legendary photographer Guy Bourdin.

SINGULAR VISION

Dame Zaha Hadid rewrote the rulebook with her amorphous, otherworldly architecture. An updated monograph of Philip Jodidio's sumptuous book Zaha Hadid: Complete Works 1979–Today, released by art specialists Taschen, is a stunning visual history of the late Iraqi-British artist's work, taking in her iconic buildings alongside her furniture and interior designs. With beautiful photography, exhaustive texts, and Hadid's own neo-futuristic drawings, it's a fitting tribute.

Starting point

Henrybuilt has made its name designing and installing kitchens and wardrobes for design-conscious clients across the United States. The company has now created its first range of standalone shelving, armoires, vanities, and consoles, as well as tables and seating. The Primary Objects collection comprises the uncomplicated and functional essentials around which any room is created.

For the kitchen, there's the customizable Shadow Box—a tall, larder-style cupboard with six panes of tinted glass in its doors—while bathroom essentials include the Puddle Jumper double vanity, and the Icicle, "a floating sliver of a medicine cabinet." All 50 pieces are crafted to the same exacting standards of Henrybuilt's "fitted architectural products."

Chairs

All a flutter

Who says interior design has to be a serious business? Certainly not the team at Masquespacio in Valencia, Spain, which—working with sister brand Houtique—have created the Wink chair. Resembling a coquettish, generously lashed eye, it features a back made from bent and welded iron tubing. The joints are sanded smooth before being treated to achieve a shiny chrome or gold finish, and the synthetic velvet seat and back come in a range of colors. Eagle-eyed readers may recognize the ocular aesthetic from the company's Wink lamp, featured on these pages in 2018. masquespacio.com

MADE FOR SHADE

While living in Kerala, Lucy Ferguson fell in love with the vibrant parasols used in religious celebrations. On her return to London, she began designing her own, and her East London Parasol Company now stocks creations made by artisans from across India and Indonesia—with elements from the same temple umbrella makers that so inspired Ferguson. These include the Etta, shown, a Balinese design in vibrant tangerine twill with a lotus design, hand-painted in gold ink. eastlondonparasols.com

Power of three

Using skills honed over three generations, Blackbird Bespoke takes commissions for one-off handcrafted metal furniture pieces, as well making its own lighting, mirrors, tables, and seating. A recent addition to its offering is this Triple Discus table light—so called because the circular steel components resemble the ancient metal discus. It is part of a collection that was designed to be both distinctive and dramatic, and to fit equally well into modern or period interiors. blackbird-bespoke.com

GOOD-LOOKING GLASS

An oversized mirror can also be an artwork if positioned cleverly. A case in point is the six-foot (1.8 m) Simple Mirror by Kalon, which has an oil-rubbed, hardwood frame and can be hung in two orientations or casually leant against a wall. Available in American Ash or American Black Walnut, each piece is produced by a small team of traditional craftspeople in New England using timber sourced from local, sustainably managed forests. It can also be built to custom specification on request. kalonstudios.com
