SCHEDULE

12:45 PM  Welcome and Introduction of film

1:00 PM  Rolling Papers Film Presentation - Attendee must stay for the discussion following to receive credit for watching the film.

In today's media, the status quo can flip so abruptly that news outlets are forced to reshape themselves. On January 1, 2014 as recreational marijuana explodes off the shelves of Colorado dispensaries, The Denver Post is telling the story. The Cannabist is the first pot section of a major newspaper and Ricardo Baca, the world's first marijuana editor sets out to report history in the making with a team of straight-laced staff writers and offbeat freelancers. Policy news, strain reviews, parenting advice and edible recipes are the new norm on a new beat: pot journalism. Legalization is an experiment for society and a risk for the dying industry of newspapers to hedge its bets on a new one.

2:20 PM  Discussion: Discussion will center on the constitutional implications of the Obama Administration's non-enforcement of the Controlled Substances Act with regard to marijuana possession in states that have legalized marijuana in various respects. Primarily, the presentation will focus on (1) constitutional litigation challenging federal authority to regulate marijuana possession, and the U.S. Supreme Court's rejection of those challenges; (2) the controversy over whether President Obama may, consistent with Article II of the Constitution, refuse (as he currently does) to enforce the CSA; and (3) the legal predicament faced by states and citizens alike due to the precarious nature of de facto legalization through non-enforcement.

2:50 PM  Adjourn
