“ArchOver’s secured and insured proposition provides a breath of fresh air in the P2P sector” - Investors Chronicle, October 2015

ArchOver’s ‘secured and insured’ proposition for investors was recently described as a “breath of fresh air in the P2P sector” by the Investors Chronicle, one of The Financial Times’ stable of highly respected professional magazines.

The author, Jonas Crosland, went on to say: “No investments are risk free, but the company’s business model goes a long way to meeting and answering the more immediate risk questions in what remains a young but fast growing sector.”

Commenting on the article, Angus Dent, CEO of ArchOver, said: “We have put a lot of time and effort into trying to create an investment proposition that is both attractive and secure – it is gratifying to see that we are not alone in believing that we have achieved that balance by one of the UK’s most established and independent commentators.”

“Lender security is at the heart of everything ArchOver does and the use of credit insurance to protect out investors against the possibility of default makes us unique in the market place. Investors must understand the true value of the security and how easy it is to collect in the case of default.”

“The due diligence processes undertaken by the insurers as well as our own specialists at ArchOver mean that borrowers have to meet the very highest standards. We like to think that has contributed to ArchOver being one of the fastest growing crowdlending platforms in the UK.”

Notes to Editors:

ArchOver has pioneered a new approach to maximize the value of crowdlending for both investors and borrowers. The company was formed by a group of seasoned professionals with substantial expertise in finance, accounting, company development, management, digital business and technology.

The ArchOver model allows companies to borrow against the credit worthiness of their clients by facilitating lending of up to 80% against the companies Accounts Receivable (AR). Credit insurance and a first floating charge over the AR provide investor security, with the AR maintained and monitored at 125% loan to value.

ArchOver is part of the Hampden Group of Companies. Hampden is a privately owned group; its key areas of operation are Lloyd’s members’ agency services, insurance company ownership and management, the provision of administration support services and accounting, audit and tax consultancy services.
