  - The chronically homeless are the highest needs, most vulnerable population with the greatest systems cost.
Housing First is an evidence-based practice that returns people to permanent housing quickly, effectively and cost-efficiently. Studies show that people are more successful when they are housed before other issues, like mental health and substance use, are addressed.

The Housing Authority, other county departments, city governments, and community-based organizations are working to:

- Establish appropriate mix of housing and services
- Ensure that individual programs and the system of care are operating effectively and in accordance with evidence-based practices
- Enhance cross-sector collaboration
