BLESS HER
PRAYER

One of the greatest ways to pull this truth into reality is to begin to pray for the women God has surrounded you with.

And I don't mean just a little "Help her Jesus" type of prayer. Picture more pounding the throne room of heaven on her behalf. And believing for the impossible in her life. And asking God to bless her in ways only He can.

Anytime the enemy starts to slip in a lie of lack in your soul as you're looking at someone who's gaining, as you're beginning to feel like you're losing, there's something you can do. Pray a "Bless Her Prayer."

A "Bless Her Prayer" is powerful. It's life-giving both for her and for you. And it puts the enemy right back where he belongs. On the sidelines. Not in the game.

Below is what I've envisioned as the "Bless Her Prayer." Insert specifics for the blanks, pray these simple words, and watch God work in strong ways . . . in her and in you. And that lie of lack will fade as you believe the truth: Her gain is not your loss.

God, today I'm praying for _____ [insert their name].
I am grateful You have gifted her with the ability to _____ [insert their gift/opportunity].
You are a good God who gives each of us good gifts.
I pray that today would be a day of increase with the ability to use those gifts in her life.
Help _____ [insert their name]
to use her time, resources, and gifts wisely today.
Surround her with what she needs most.
And bless her greatly. In Jesus' name, amen.

© Nicki Koziarz. Excerpt from Chapter 9 of Why Her? 6 Truths We Need to Hear When Measuring Up Leaves Us Falling Behind