In the month of 1888 London was disturbed for weeks by tumult in Trafalgar Square. Processions growing continually in number and in violence came from the East End concentration in Trafalgar Square. The full force of the Police was gathered both in the Square & the surrounding streets. Troops Many conflicts between them and the crowd followed: many were seriously injured many arrested. Finally the Guards were called out and the Life Guards patrolled the Square. All these precautions did not protect the Oxford Street and South Circular from the breaking of windows, & the robbing or destruction of property. And yet all this began in the herding of a few homeless, a homeless creatures by night in Trafalgar Square. It began in the want & misery of paupers & outcasts; it grew into a political strife led by politicians and members of Parliament, and an exhibition of Police & Soldiers who could have freedom such agroves from an outset so ~~foolish~~ ^{such} and contemptible. Who can say what might not have been its end. The show of armed force was ^{happily} enough; but what if the show had descended in its actual use? Any madman or malefactor might have rendered the employment of force a duty. We were told indeed that these tumult mongers were only loafers, shiplings, and boys. But they were met by military forces with horse & foot. And they might have brought on a public conflict ending in bloodshed.

In the month of September 1889 30,000 men, not shipplings, loafers ~~on~~ ^{or} vagabonds, but the bone & sinew of our manhood were for four weeks on strike. Their wives & children were hanging and dying severely from all kinds of privation. The Port of London was stagnant. There was no movement on the ^{Thames only} river, but the trades. Ships laden with cargo could unload nothing. The river was crowded by them but not a barge in a hard mood: the traders on either bank of the Thames had ~~were~~ no sale for their goods.
Processions filled the streets day by day; on Saturday a procession of thousands marched to St. George's Park. Meeting on Tower Hill & elsewhere were ~~addresses~~ ^{excited} by the leaders with a fire of natural oratory. The excitement grew ^{greater every} day. And yet not a fence of glass was broken. The Rector of London when the Great Strike ended spoke as follows:

And yet at any moment a madman or a malefactor, or a wretched fool by some act of destruction might have kindled a fire that would have been hard to extinguish. ~~This all the more being~~ ~~the peaceful, and honourable action of the men.~~ ^{If thirty thousand hungry} men, irritated by the refusal of what they believed to be just & right had broken out into violence the police & soldiers might have cut them down but it would have been a black record in the history of Engt. London only but of England. And yet we were on the eve of such a disaster, While this anxiety was weighing on the less reflecting and the most ^{Selv.} confident minds there was a great silence. Public opinion, & popular sympathy at home & abroad were ^{necessarily on the side of} ~~with~~ the men. We heard little of freedom of contract ~~as of the Political Economy~~ and teaches that between man & man, even when the safety of London is at stake no one may interfere. Capital is the supreme factor of human Society: a labour is its servant.

 The will of Capital is sovereign. Labour has no will of its own. Labour is bound to work for what it can get, and Capital is free to buy labour in the cheapest market. The labourer is "wary of his hire" that is of the minimum left ^{after} ~~of~~ ^{before} ~~conflict,~~ ^{rights to} Labour has not a human life ^{is} only an economic ^{life.} All this which was so loud & dominant ~~to take~~ four or five weeks was silent & meditative, and passive. The strike ended & peace returned. The fear passed away. Soon the old voices were heard again. The modern Political Economy refuses all arbitration. There are only two parties, it tells us, in labour ~~there~~ ^{despotic} the masters & the men, They forget ^{outside of} ~~the whole of~~ ^{of the Commonwealth} ~~of the Country~~ ~~& waging~~ ^{and instigating} ~~for the~~ ~~the~~ ^{It has a right & a power} ~~disorder~~ these distinctions & dangerous contentions. This third party is in number, freedom, & authority able to make itself felt. It has no need of leave or permission from any man, to make its voice heard in the disputes which threaten the peace & safety of the country. It is absolutely independent, & impartial. It does not assume to be an Arbitrator; but if possible to be a Peacemaker or failing this to protect the public welfare from the disorders which ~~threaten~~ ^{may} the disputants, may at any moment bring upon it.

I am afraid that I have ventured to speak merely ~~in~~ ^{about} somewhat of Political Economy as of Political 3.
Economists. I have believed myself all my life to be a Free trader & Political Economist. Sixty years ago, when another future was before me, I not only read the older Political Economists; but also I knew personally some of the leaders of the School. I remember dining at the Political Economy Club where I saw a head ~~of~~ ^{of} a groled oyster.
Sir Henry Parnell, Archibishop Whately and many more of that date. At that ~~date~~ ^{moment} a better man was working in Political Economy, which has now gained the ascendent. Between the old Political Economy, and the new there is a great interest. The old was broad, sympathetic & humane; ~~the old~~ ^{the modern} economics, will appear to me after it.

For the present I will only say that it does not seem to me broad, or sympathetic, or humane. These are shay words but I will justify them. ~~The word~~ ^{its true primary sense is} specially domestic. His ^{the modern} Par. ~~is~~ ^{is} in ~~the~~ ^{the} ~~meaning~~ ^{and all their needs that a} ~~want~~ ^{want} ~~the~~ ^{the} administration of the house & home. It embraces all the members of the family and their safety ~~and~~ ^{and} welfare in its fullest sense, the feeding, clothing, instruction, all useful provisions for ~~safety~~ ^{the} certain health & in sickness. The ^{first} ~~word~~ ^{meaning} of economy is especially ~~domestic~~ ^{the} administration of a home.

It is a metaphor to speak of Political Economy. The State or City or Commonwealth is a family or household because it is the aggregate of the homes & domestic life of a people. But it is also the aggregate of the duties and obligations of the domestic life of the people. Older Political Economy therefore comprises the safety, the physical & moral needs of the State, the public order, the defence of the State, the administration of Justice civil & criminal, distribution & consumption, and under the last will come the exchange of values. As domestic economy is coextensive with the obligations of the household, so political economy is coextensive with the obligations of the Commonwealth. It was in this sense that the older Political Economists understood their subject. The modern Political Economist occupies themselves chiefly if not wholly with the exchange of values the ~~most~~ narrowest & least sympathetic & humane function of economy namely the management of money and the payment of liabilities, the ties of the household. It was in the wider & more humane sense that the older Political Economists wrote. This has been well brought out by Mr. Rae in two articles of the Contemporary Review for ¹⁸⁵⁸ and still more laboriously by Dr. Ingrams in his very able and complete work "The History of Political Economy"

But we are told that whatever be the distress of the deserving unemployed men the only remedy to be found in is, the progressive law of commercial prosperity which must employ its surplus ^{capital} in the employment of hands, thereby ~~attaining~~ extinguishing distress, and bringing in the golden age, when no man shall be without work. How long it will take to accomplish this paradaisaical change when every man shall sit down under his own vine and under his own fig. tree we are not told. Since Adam Smith we have had a hundred years of Political Economy but three generations of men have passed away before the dawn of universal wages. It is difficult to write gravely without writing sharply of such heartless treatment of human suffering. A leading Political Economist, whom I knew well, when I pressed him by asking what is to become of men, women & children while the absolute economical laws are slowly reaching their realization, answered "They must leave the country or cease to be."

But this compels me to enter upon the moral foundation of the Droit au travail, or the right to subsist or sustenance without work as recognized in the Poor Law of Elizabeth. This is the popular delusion^{which I have countenanced} we have already seen that Mr Mill declares this right to be founded in the law of nature and to be a moral axiom. Let his opinion stand he regarded as singular, or merely speculative, I will quote the teaching of one of our most moderate and careful Professors of Political Economy Mr. John Henry Fawcett. His teaching has a double weight because he was not only a Professor of signal excellence, but a Statesman of native judgment.

of signal excellence, but a Statesman of mature judgment.
In his Manual of Political Economy, he says, "Any person upon application has a right to demand maintenance from the poor rates." He adds, "England alone recognizes this legal right" to be supported by the State. Perhaps he did not refer to the Droit au travail in France because it was "abolished" ^{in England} ~~about three hundred years ago~~, ^{but} ~~it did~~ out of right. It may indeed be true that this right is affirmed only by a legal enactment, ~~and~~ ~~not because a legal & compulsion enactment by the 5 of Elizabeth c. 3~~
But it is denied in no Christian land, because it is founded in the universal Christian law: as well as the law of nature.

Ornit

cause liable to abuse by the un instructed especially in times of distress when the un sympathetic language and acts of the wealthy often well tends drive them to resentment.

The laws of property are founded upon a higher and anterior law, the law of nature.

If it is the law of nature that sanctifies & may say consecrates the positive laws of property

First

The following will, I believe, be found to be an accurate statement of the Christian law of property⁵ as it bears upon the question before us.

1. By the law of nature ~~men~~^{all} have a right to the use of things which were created for them, & for their uses to once 1.

2. But this common right does not exclude the possession of any thing as proper to each. But the common right is by natural law, the right of property is by human & positive law: and the positive law of property is expedient for three reasons 1) what is one man's is more safely used than what is in common 2) human affairs are better ordered by recognized rights of each man. 3) Human society is more peaceful when each has his own: protected by the law of justice: Suum cuique.

3. Theft is therefore always a sin for two reasons first it is contrary to justice. Secondly because it is done either by stealth or by violence.

4. But the human & positive law cannot derogate from the natural & divine law. According to the divine law all things all things are ordered to sustain the prosperity of man. And therefore the division & appropriation of things cannot hinder the subsistence of man in case of necessity. Therefore the possessions of those who have superabundantly by the natural law are due to the sustenance of the poor. As St. Ambrose quoted in the Decretals says "Hic the bread of the furnishing that you keep back: after clothing of the naked ^{the money you buy in justice} ~~each~~ release before lay by: the redemp~~the~~ and liberation of the miserable."

But this is said of extreme urgent necessity when life is at stake.

This interpretation of the commandment "Thou shall not steal" is in the universal law of God from the beginning.

Begin

The poor who possess neither land nor capital ~~as~~ ^{have} them possess right by the right of nature to till a to the sustenance of life. The able bodied possess the power & skill of labour. The impotent cannot work. The law of nature gives them as we will say a right to work, or to sustenance without work. Whether this right be only natural, or also legal as it happens in England, it binds all who possess the property while human law ~~too~~ recognizes & protects. The English Poor Law is a law of natural justice having a divine sanction, creating rights in the poor, & duties in the rich. I have always looked upon the Poor Law as a rent charge upon the inheritance of England in behalf of the younger children. The ~~Elders~~ ^{some} possess the real property in land, & the ~~poor~~ ^{poor} the personally in Capital. The poor possess nothing but their inheritance of natural right.

If the Poor Law of Elizabeth had not been passed the English Land Laws would not have survived till now. From Henry VII to Charles II the possession of land has been passing from the ~~few~~^{many} to the few. In proportion with population it was never held in so few hands as at this day. The Squire, the Yeoman & the Forty shilling Freeholders are gone and the land of England & Scotland is held by Mr Fawcett says, that the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834 put the first restraint upon the right to demand work or support.

It did so by refusing out door relief to men able to work. That is by refusing all relief except in the work house.

Now it is to be remembered that labour or skill are a true Capital as land or money. But for the investment of this live capital work is necessary. To refuse work is to ~~make~~ ^{define} a man of his labour or skill ~~and~~ ^{by suspending its exercise thereby} treat him as a culprit unworthy of help ~~as~~ ^{and loafer} a loafer, an idler, ~~or vagabond~~. Is it wondrous that our working men of independent spirit ~~of~~ ^{Massachusetts} would rather starve than be degraded - as paupers? And still more ^{they refuse} to be made paupers by breaking up their homes, and sacrificing all the dearest bonds & charities in life, ^{perhaps those to others,} ~~because~~ ^{but} ~~they~~ are the only possessions on which happiness a home depend. This is to refuse a natural right except upon a condition which renders it intolerable. No man has ^{a right} ~~any~~ to attach such conditions.

Mr Fawcett is wisely & firmly opposed to the theory that the State should guarantee employment. But he discusses the question whether ~~transiently~~ ^{temporarily} at least a special & urgent emergency some intervention of the State were expedient. His answer is as follows
" Some who agree with the observations which have just been made may be inclined to think that the Government ought to find employment in times of occasional depression. Few would presume to assert that in no case could such a policy be justifiable; our object is rather to show that the cases which warrant such Government interference are much less frequent than is usually supposed."

Nelson gives the instance of the Cotton Famine in Lancashire during the American War. ~~But~~ He adds that it must be remembered that trade was improved in Scotland, Bradford, Dundee, & Belfast. But why should the vast manufacturing power of Lancashire with its immense plant of mills, Machinery, & hand be broken up? No momentary profits of Bradford & Dundee would compensate the Capitalists, and the Workers of Lancashire for breaking up of house & home with all the aggravations of poverty and ruin. A wise interference saved Lancashire and all its industries.

Mr. Fawcett sums up his opinion in these words "When any extra strain is put upon one poor law system it absolutely breaks down. When the Lancashire Operatives were thrown out of employment during the American War all the resources of parochial relief were exhausted, in a few months : (less of money had to be obtained) from the Government, & earnest appeals were made to the whole nation."

What exemplar of Alelions. Nitro-nug was there in all this? And yet the other day nobody asked loans from the Government for the unemployed in London.
