Chattahoochee Methodist Church
Robertstown, Georgia

The exact date of the founding of Chattahoochee Methodist Church is not known. A deed recorded in 1860 states that for the sum of one dollar paid in hand, Mr. John Trammel did grant, sell, bargain, release, confirm, and convey a tract of land containing three acres to John L. Richardson, H. H. Conley, Benjamin Allison, Charles L. Williams, Jerome England, James Gregory, and John Trammel, trustees of the church. It is commonly believed, however, that services were held in a church building much earlier than that date.

The present church site was at one time a part of Habersham County, then was later annexed by Lumpkin County, and finally became a part of White.

This church was the center of attention in the early summer of 1950 when it was used by Twentieth Century Fox Film Corp. of Hollywood California in the filming of "I'd Climb the Highest Mountain."
