In connection with the history of Concord Church, East Putnam Charge, I would like to add some incidents which were not included in the history as first written.

Although Concord is 142 years old, there have been only two weddings ceremonies performed in the Church. Before the War between the States, when Joe E. Brown was governor of Georgia, the Capitol being at Milledgeville, his carriage stood before Concord Church, while his secretary, Mr. Putnam, was united to Miss Mary Nardin, a young lady of this neighborhood, and granddaughter of Thomas Johnson, one of the founders of the Church. It was probably a rare occurrence, for the Governor's private carriage to stand on a rural church ground, far from his usual place of worship.

The other marriage took place in 1913, when Miss Lucy Jones, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Jones, and Mr. King Callaway, son of the late Mr. and Mrs. J.W. Callaway, also of this neighborhood.

And at the time of the Charleston earthquake in Aug. 1886, there was a revival in progress at Concord. The pastor, Rev. Parke, found the congregation, even if attentive, unresponsive to urgent appeals to show some interest. At length he said: "You people are so cold-hearted and indifferent, it would require something that would shake the church to its foundations to rouse you." At that moment the building began to tremble, and soon was fairly rocking, while the pastor walked the floor wringing his hands. Then Mr. Jesse T. Batchelor, uncle of Mrs. J.W. Manly, raised his arms high above his head, calling out: "People, people, be calm, it is only an earthquake and will soon be over, it will hardly do any damage." At last theJamie subsided, and when the tremors ceased the services were resumed, and before they closed, the altar was crowded with penitent people.

Mrs. Annie Kate Medary.
I sincerely hope that the History of Methodism in Georgia will be published soon. I am an old woman, and I hope to come into possession of a copy while I live.

My grandfather was a local Methodist preacher, by the name of Wiley Arnold, brother of Miles W. Arnold, and my great-grandfather was Rev. William Arnold (Father Arnold) and is buried in Edenton Cemetery. So naturally I am interested in Church affairs, and am glad to have been able to write the histories of Concord, St. Paul's and Wesley Chapel for the book.

Sincerely,

Mrs. Annie M. Dustin McRory.
