Pleasant Hill

Pleasant Hill church is located in the Crooked Creek community in the Brasstown Valley. It was established before the Civil War by the Ellis family. Its cemetery contains the graves of a number of Negro slaves.

For many years a log house on the present site of the church served as both church and school. George Truett once taught school there.

The present building was erected in the first decade of this century. It is the only church on the charge still without electricity. It still uses kerosene lamp chandeliers given by Stanton's Chapel to Zion and passed on to Pleasant Hill,
