

PART 1: PREPARING: START WITH YOUR WHY

List down a hundred reasons on paper why you're getting a virtual career.

To accomplish anything small, you need a reason. To accomplish something life-changing - you'll need more and more refined reasons.

A reason usually looks like this: "I want to get financial freedom" – but that's not enough.

You have to put the exact reason. "I want to have financial freedom because _____."

Plus you can't use the dictionary and say, "I want financial freedom because it gives me freedom to travel."

No. State WHOM you want to do it for:

"I want to get financial freedom because my wife needs my time to take care of her because she is sick or she is very lonely when I leave her for three years at home without a husband."

Be very specific and try to dedicate your 100 reasons to people you care about.

That is very important. If you connect your reason to people you care about, activities you care about, then you will have a better chance of creating a list of 100 reasons.

Some people are going to say, Jomar, that's a very long list. A hundred reasons.

Yes, but you will need it, because one day you're going to ask yourself, "Why am I doing this again? This is very difficult." And you'll have your original list to always come back to encourage you.

This is what Simon Sinek said about in his book: you start with WHY...Why you are doing this? The following pages will help jog your memory why. Remember to always include your loved ones in the picture in your mind when you check the items.
