| WRITING A BIOGRAPHY — Research  Now that you have chosen a subject and a focus point for the biography, you need to begin your search for information. Begin by calling or meeting the person and asking their permission to interview them. Tell them you will send them a list of questions to get them thinking, then follow up with an interview by phone or in person. Get their address, e-mail address, or fax number if you cannot hand the questions to them.  Write the date and time that you talked to your subject and circle the way you talked to them.  15. Date and time: Method: telephone in person  Now, write a purpose statement. Keep it general enough to be supported by a variety of instances in your subject's life. If it is too specific you will have a harder time.  Example: Too specific: To show how Grandpa Martin ran a successful grocery store.  Better: To show how Grandpa Martin persevered and refused to quit.  Write the purpose of your biography.  16 | e.  | the door   |

| 4.    | What was Bunyan tempted to do at the observance of the Lord's Supper?   |                            |                        |                                     |  |  |  |  |
| 5.    | What did he conclude later was the reason for the temptation?   |                            |                        |                                     |  |  |  |  |
| 6.    | Bunyan says that while he had the consumption, he was also "sick in my inward man." What was Satan troubling him with this time?      |                            |                        |                                     |  |  |  |  |
| 7.    | Bunyan often found victory from his depression by remembering Write the verse that brought a sudden change in his thinking this time. |                            |                        |                                     |  |  |  |  |
| 8.    | Bunyan became ill again. What was his temptation this time?   |                            |                        |                                     |  |  |  |  |
| 9.    | What verse brought him victory? Write it.   |                            |                        |                                     |  |  |  |  |
| 10.   | During his time of "soul inertia," what word is used that shows us that he had even begun to doubt that God exists?                   |                            |                        |                                     |  |  |  |  |
| Read  | Part 3: "Preaching  | Experiences" (pp. 277-2    | 79).                   |                                     |  |  |  |  |

| ○ 16. Make any revisions your teacher suggests.  Think of two people to use as secondary sources. Because your person is still alive, there is likely no a lot of information written about him. Therefore, you will talk to a few people who know him, but are not related to him. These interviews will be much simpler; basically, you will just ask, "How did you learn to know?" "How would you summarize his/her life?" Aim to get feedback from them related to your purpose statement. |  |  |  |  |  |  |
