

The War for Mansoul

An allegory by John Bunyan, retold by Ethel Barrett

“I must have Mansoul at any cost,” said the giant Diabolus. “I will settle for nothing less.” He was sitting on his haunches, pushing up little mounds of brimstone as he spoke. His warlords sat around him in a circle in one of the private conference caverns of the pit, eyeing the mounds of brimstone. Periodic spurts of fire erupted from crevices and lighted up their faces and sent their shadows shooting up the sides of the walls.

From the huge yawning cavern beyond came occasional blasts of hot air, sometimes rushing through the stalactites and stalagmites with a formidable roar, sometimes winding through with great sighs and moans, sometimes in whispers.

“And just how,” said one of the warlords, still watching the mounds of brimstone, “do you propose to do this, M’Lord?”

“That is why I called this council, Beelzebub,” said Diabolus, looking up for a moment at the speaker. “I do not know exactly how. But of one thing I am sure. It will be easy.”

“May I remind you, M’Lord,” said Beelzebub, “that this is not B.B.” They all exchanged glances in silence.

“B.B.,” Beelzebub went on relentlessly—“ ‘before banishment.’ Then you were Lucifer, son of morning, created by the great King Shaddai, ruler over all his angels, carrying his government to the angels, carrying their worship back to him—greatest in beauty, greatest in power—” of brimstone, “the one creation Shaddai has set his heart on, cares the most about. What sweeter revenge could I possibly have than to take his most precious possession? I must have it.”

“Mansoul is Shaddai’s treasure,” interrupted Diabolus, beginning to flatten out his mounds

“You must have it,” said Beelzebub. “That is exactly what happened B.B. You were not satisfied with your lot. Your paunch was growling for more. Only that time you cried, ‘I will set my throne above the throne of Shaddai. I will be like Shaddai.’ You wanted nothing less than absolute, ultimate power, and you tried to start a rebellion—”

“I did start a rebellion,” corrected Diabolus. “And it worked.”

“Yes, it worked,” said Beelzebub, “if you mean you were successful in getting enough angels to follow you. But it’s like saying ‘the operation was successful but the patient died.’ We were all banished to this miserable pit forever, you and your fallen angels with you.”

Diabolus swept the mounds of brimstone away in an elaborate gesture and uncrouched himself. “Are you finished?” he asked Beelzebub.

“I am finished,” said Beelzebub. “I merely wished to reiterate the facts to be perfectly sure it is clear in our minds what we are up against. I am, of course,” he added, leaning forward hungrily on his haunches, “with you all the way.”

Diabolus sprang into action. “Apollyon,” he said, “hand me that stick, will you? Legion, draw up closer. And Alecto, perhaps you’d better take notes. The rest of you, watch and listen.” He leaned forward and began to make marks in the brimstone.

“Now,” he said, “this whole area is Universe—situated between these two poles—Heaven and Hell. And right—here—is—Mansoul. Now. As you know, Mansoul is a town so fair, so commodious, so wonderful, so—well, it has no equal under Heaven. King Shaddai made it for his delight and for his glory; he gave it dominion over everything around it and it enjoys privileges and powers beyond belief—”

“We know that, we know that,” said Apollyon. “How are you planning to take this town?”

“There is a wall of course,” Diabolus went on, “and five gates: the Ear-gate, the Eye-gate, the Mouth-gate, the Nose-gate, and the Feel-gate. The three highest in power are Lord Mayor Understanding and Lord Willbewill and Mr. Conscience.”

“How are you planning to take it?” said Beelzebub.

“It’s impregnable,” Diabolus admitted at last. “The walls are so made that they cannot be scaled or breached without the consent of those inside.”

“And the gates?”

“The gates cannot be opened—”

“—without the consent of those inside,” they all finished it together.

There was a long silence.

“If we muster all our forces—” suggested an underling timidly.

“You are very stupid, my friend,” Diabolus shot back. “All our forces would not make a dent. No, my idea—” he paused for effect, “my idea is to make them want to let us in.”

“Want to let us in!” they all cried at once. “Who would want to let us in?”

“We look pretty seamy, M’Lord,” Apollyon finished lamely. “Our onetime princely appearance is a thing of the past.”

“I know,” said Diabolus. “I’d thought of that. A scrubby lot, all of us, a scrubby lot indeed. One look at us and the whole town would be on a red alert. And that is just my strategy. They will not see us. We will be invisible. And they will not see our intentions either.”

“Our intentions will be invisible too!” said Legion.

“We’ll cloak them with lies and deceit!” said Apollyon.

“And flattery!” said Beelzebub.

“Yessss,” said Diabolus. “We’ll cajole them, delude them, pretending things that will never be and promising things they shall never get. Lies, lies, lies—the only way to get Mansoul to let us in. And so our intentions will be invisible and we will be invisible—that is, all except one of us. And I suggest—” he looked around the circle of faces, “I suggest that I be that one.”

“By all means!” they all cried at once. “For you are the genius at deceit, a master liar!”

“The master liar,” Diabolus corrected. “I say this in all modesty. There has never been my equal.” He waited for someone to challenge him. No one did. “Well then,” he said, “now that that’s decided, the next question is my disguise. What shall it be?”

“It must be something over which they have dominion!”

“But something they respect!”

“One of those beasts Mansoul deems wiser than the rest!”

“Yes—something wise and beautiful!”

“They must be completely disarmed!”

“What do you think—” said Diabolus, pulling up the threads, “what do you think of something in the dragon family?”

Allegories Worth Reading

Palace Beautiful Albert E. Sims

The King left the palace in the care of a Keeper with instructions to guard it diligently, especially against the cunning traitor, Black Dwarf. This allegory vividly portrays the deceitfulness of the enemy working through our fallen passions to bring us into the bondage of sin. The text includes Bible references throughout to help you make connections between the allegorical story and Scripture.

The Celestial Railroad

Nathaniel Hawthorne

Using Pilgrim's Progress as a basis, this allegory shows a man setting out for the Celestial City as Christian of old did. However, this pilgrim takes the new and improved route, traveling on the Celestial Railroad. The author's insights into counterfeit Christianity will challenge you to diligently walk the true pilgrim way.

The Pilgrim's Progress

John Bunyan

On his way to the Celestial City, Christian encounters many true-to-life characters: Obstinate, Pliable, Faithful, Talkative, Ignorance, Hopeful, and others. Some help him, some hinder him, but each of them teaches him—and us—something about the Christian life. Since we, too, are seeking the Celestial City, this classic is worth the time and effort required to read it.

Horse Stories From the Man Who Played With Sticks

Johnny Ruhl

Author Johnny Ruhl is an experienced horse trainer. When working with horses, he often thought of the parallels between training horses and the important lessons we need to learn to live a God-honoring life. That is how this collection of stories came to be. The stories are fascinating in themselves, but more importantly, each story teaches a Christian principle.

As children read or listen to the stories, they will catch something they can understand. Adults will see additional truths at a deeper level that apply to their own lives. Includes detailed instructions for making your own gee haw whimmydiddle stick!

The School by the Cornfield

Samuel D. Coon

What if homeschools and private schools were illegal? This illustrated children's story, extensively researched and footnoted for adult readers, tells how Amish fathers in Iowa during the 1960s refused to send their children to public school. Despite fines and jail time, the men stood firm on the conviction that they were responsible for the godly education of their children.

Developing Discernment WITH READING CURRICULUM

Reading well is an essential life skill. In addition to fostering a lifelong love of reading, Christian Light's Reading program helps students develop the reading and analytical thinking skills they need in today's world.

With this curriculum, students do more than simply read stories and fill in blanks. In addition to working with story facts, students learn to do the following:

- Summarize information.
- Make inferences and predictions.
- Draw conclusions.
- Identify literary elements and techniques.
- Analyze word choices.
- Evaluate what they read.
- Make personal applications.

On our website you can view actual pages from readers and LightUnits. You can also purchase readers separately simply for the pleasure of reading high-quality stories. Readers are available for Grades 1-8.

The readers are truly lovely.
I would buy them even if I didn't use the Reading curriculum.

The War for Mansoul

John Bunyan, retold by Ethel Barrett

Long ago a mighty king named Shaddai built a town called Mansoul for His own delight. This allegory begins with Diabolus—Satan—deciding to take Mansoul as revenge against King Shaddai.

A fast-moving tale of love and intrigue and adventure, The War for Mansoul is a mirror into our own souls. We see ourselves in Mansoul's fall, its misery under Satan's rule, and its rescue by Prince Emmanuel.

As the story of man's fall and redemption, The War for Mansoul describes our struggles, failures, and victories. It helps us better understand our enemy and moves us to praise and worship our great King and Saviour.
