Professor I.J. Condit spent a full day with the assistant studying freezing of figs and general problems. The conclusions were that all young figs which had been well cared for and which were thoroughly wrapped early in the fall were only slightly injured by the severe winter.

A full day was spent with the F.A. in examining soil conditions on some Miller and Lux property. This property is being placed on the market and many desire to know its adaptability for fruit.

A vine variety collection of some 107 varieties has been planted at Le Grand. The vines for the most part were obtained from Davis Farm and the Extension Office superintended the planting and carefully mapped the plot.

GENERAL REMARKS.—Give any interesting points in regard to the work, especially as to progress and results. (Use extra sheets, if necessary.)

Test of experimental evidence regarding control of Grape Mealy Bug has been carried out on the place of Mr. L.F. Arnold and negative results recorded. Crude Carbolic Cresole soap emulsion was used as spray. Not only were a large number of the vines seriously burned but the mealy bug was still prevalent in large enough quantities to do great damage to the crop.

Work at the present times consists of reviewing the young demonstration vineyards and orchards, watching the summer pruning and tying.

The final arrangements have been made for the Horticultural Conference Trip and plans for a fig growers trip are underway. This latter move was made at the request of I.J. Condit of California Peach and Fig Growers. We are planning on a campaign to interest fig growers in topworking the many worthless capri trees.

Some time has been devoted to a study of moisture conditions in orchards and vineyards through the country.

The Western army worm is still causing some damage in the county. This seems marked after each alfalfa cutting. The worms, deprived of alfalfa pasture visit neighboring orchards and vineyards causing great damage to young plantings.

I. J. Condit and the assistant spent a day reviewing the tree fertilizer plots. Numerous soil moisture determinations were made. Soil in some of the peach orchards has been below the wilting coefficient for as much as four weeks. The trees show no signs of suffering and in some cases are producing new foliage. The soil was examined to a depth of six feet.

The Fig Growers Comm. met to discuss the future of demonstration and investigation plots. Cover crop plots will be undertaken and irrigation investigations were requested.

The Horticultural Comm. of the Farm Bureau met with a number of representatives of the local Fruit Exchanges to discuss the Grape Mealy Bug situation. Attempts will be made to enforce fumigation of all picking lugs in order to prevent infestation of new plantings.

GENERAL REMARKS.—Give any interesting points in regard to the work, especially as to progress and results. (Use extra sheets, if necessary.)

Some very interesting results have been obtained from the tree fertilizing experiments which are nearing the season's completion.

The project covering irrigation demonstration work has been worked out by the Merced District, the subject matter division of the University and the Farm Advisor's office. The project utilizes what will be known as irrigation farms.

The office has been instrumental in locating a fig irrigation experiment to cover a period of five years. The land utilized will be leased and turned over to the Division of Citriculture to treat as they see fit. A fund will be furnished by the Chamber of Commerce to establish and maintain an orchard on the piece. The papers have not yet been signed but the prospects look bright.
