

Not New Work: Vincent Fecteau Selects from the Collection

July 25–November 8, 2009

In a marked departure from past New Work exhibitions, which have typically introduced recent work by a selected artist, this presentation features a group of drawings, paintings, and sculptures drawn from the museum's permanent collection. These works were chosen by the San Francisco–based sculptor Vincent Fecteau. Over the past year, he has sifted through thousands of objects, gradually narrowing his choices down to just over twenty pieces that have rarely, if ever, been on display. In organizing the exhibition, Fecteau excavated the museum using his own aesthetic lens, seeking out idiosyncratic works of art and thought-provoking juxtapositions in an effort to offer a new window onto the collection. The resulting presentation serves as a diagram of his movement through the museum's holdings. Rather than advancing from a prescribed thematic narrative, his selections invite visitors to consider how a narrative evolves from the experience of viewing. In this way Fecteau privileges a visual encounter with the object over an understanding shaped by a discursive history.

The exhibition represents the artist's attempt to depict more complicated aspects of collecting and question traditional ideas of what constitutes a masterpiece. Fecteau has a deep interest in narratives that often go untold but are present nonetheless. This grouping of works reflects his desire to talk about how the life of an art object extends beyond what is typically seen in the museum. In effect, his selections pose important questions about what makes a work of art relevant, interesting, and worthy of attention.

Apsara DiQuinzio, Assistant Curator, Painting and Sculpture

In conjunction with the exhibition, SFMOMA has commissioned Fecteau to create an artist's book that consists of approximately a dozen loose postcards featuring Christopher Wilmarth's New (1968). The book is available for purchase in the MuseumStore.

The artist and curator would like to thank Geoff Kaplan, Ian Reeves, and interns Anna Schneider and Joanna Szupinska for their assistance with this project.
