

Plymouth High Varsity Basketball Philosophy

My vision for developing a successful basketball program at Plymouth High School will be based on toughness, trust and togetherness. Our basketball program will work extremely hard to ensure that a team takes the floor that reflects these values. We expect our program to be one that is respected and admired by our fans and opponents alike.

Our values of toughness, trust and togetherness will lead to success on the court for our program. That success will require sacrifice from every individual and coach for the betterment of the program. A WE > me mindset will be at the center of this thought process.

It is the expectation that our players attend classes and have the necessary toughness and dedication to do the best they are capable of in their academic pursuits; this is the first step in the trust relationship between athlete and coach. Our players will be expected to represent themselves with the highest integrity at the high school, in the community and on social media. I will need to be able to trust your character and believe that you are together with us to make this a great program. Trust takes time, consistency and proof.

Our players and coaches must have trust in each other that we are striving to reach our full potential both individually and as a team on a daily basis. It will take toughness and togetherness to be at your best every day. Our toughness will be challenged daily to make yourself better, make your teammates better and make your team better

It is my hope that the exposure to the core values of our program will benefit individuals involved for the remainder of their lives.
