Help your student teachers succeed during their field experiences. Here are four tips from Your First Year: How to Survive and Thrive as a New Teacher by Todd, Madeline, and Katherine Whitaker. Share these tips with your student teachers anytime to help them increase their skills—and confidence—in the classroom!

1. Fake it Until You Make It

You set the tone and expectations for your classroom and first impressions matter. “Even though you may not feel like you know what you are doing during these first days, it is critically important to look like you know what you are doing.”

2. You can push the “re-set button”

It’s okay to re-establish classroom expectations if you find that things aren’t going well. “Admitting faults or mistakes can be difficult for anyone. But in this profession, and in life, we cannot be afraid to repair.”

3. Plan your lessons to the minute

Structure your lessons so as to effectively manage student time and maximize learning potential. “By preparing as much as you can prior to students arriving, you increase the likelihood of success when school starts.”

4. Build relationships

Get to know your supervising teacher and school administrators; draw from the strengths of those around you so that you can become the type of teacher you want to be! “Work together to create a safe and positive educational relationship that will get you through the hard times and help you celebrate the great ones.”

For more, check out Your First Year: How to Survive and Thrive as a New Teacher by Todd Whitaker, Madeline Whitaker, and Katherine Whitaker. And share your experiences on Twitter at @RoutledgeEOE using the hashtag #yourfirstyear

Bonus

A free study guide for student teachers is available at www.routledge.com/9781138126152, to help student teachers apply the book’s strategies to their field experience and to help them plan for having their own classroom one day.