Labour Management Policy and Procedure

“There were no significant work incidents or grievances from employees reported, solved, or carried over to the next period in Aicón in the last three years (2016-2018)”

As a consulting company, manpower is one of critical success factors of Aicón. The employees are mandated to follow Aicón’s labour policy as guidelines for ethical conduct in the company. New employees are also encouraged to understand the labour laws and principles, and discussion with the Directors on labour principles is usually organized as part of internal awareness raising and capacity building for the employees. In 2018, Aicón was in the process to prepare a draft of Company Employment Regulation following the Indonesia labour law regulations. To be published in 2019, the draft also considers the international labour standards and principles.

In overall, Aicón’s labour policy includes treating people fairly with no discrimination, respecting association and collective bargaining, ensuring health and safety at workplace, providing social protection, paying salaries and wages according to the pertinent regulations, and avoiding child labour and forced labour. Aicón also ensures equal opportunities employees at workplace. Decisions on rewards and promotions are taken based on merit.

The Board of Directors or Commissioners can handle cases or employment disputes by following the Indonesia Manpower Law or the international labour standards and principles. If needed, external authorities may be invited to solve the industrial disputes.

The Board of Directors or Commissioners can solve the cases according to the environmental regulations.
Activities to raise internal awareness on environment impacts were carried out through internal discussions with Directors. Up to now, the company does not provide environmental training for employees because its core operations do not have significant environmental impacts. However, the Directors usually bring up discussions on the environmental performance in the top management meetings quarterly and in the employee meetings. That is part of leaders’ review on the results of monitoring and improvement of environmental performance in the company.

Anti-Corruption Management Policies and Procedure

“There were no actual or potential corruption incidents reported, solved and carried over to the next period in 2017 and 2018, while there was a potential corruption incident in 2016 leading to Aicón’s decision to release an opportunity to obtain a project”

It reflects a commitment of the company to comply with all relevant anti-corruption regulations and avoid potential corruption events. In case of a corruption incident occurred, an employee or external party can report the incident though Aicón’s grievance mechanism or whistleblowing system.
