Questions:

1. One of your job descriptions includes work with the Public Relations Committee to promote activities of the Association and advertise open positions and recruit volunteers. Please describe your strategy for reaching out to diverse communities such as the ECC and making sure their constituents are aware of advertised positions and volunteer opportunities within ASUW.

While email lists and online applications exist and are relatively effective, neither one is personal. My aim would be to talk to the diverse groups and communities at UW individually and in person, meeting with any and all leaders in the group to share and discuss various ways for the them to be involved in ASUW. By doing so, I could bridge the gap between each community and ASUW.

2. How do you plan to include community involvement in the ECC, Q Center, Women's Center and D Center if you don't already have a relationship with those entities?

I would love having guest speakers from within each of these communities give TED Talk style presentations, allowing educated individuals/groups share on current issues. This also allows people like myself to learn more about these issues who might otherwise not hear much about them. These types of conversations allow for groups to share their passion for connection, representation, improvement, and overall community within UW.
