Faculty Senate Chair's Remarks

Joseph Janes, Associate Professor, Information School

It is my great honor to serve as the Chair of the Faculty Senate for the 2019-2020 year. On behalf of all of Senate leadership, we are looking forward to making considerable progress on a number of pivotal issues and areas of concern this academic year:

- Advancing the work of the Faculty 2050 report: This will include actions by the Faculty Senate, several of our faculty councils, the elected faculty councils in the schools, colleges and campuses, and work with our colleagues in the administration to further the goals of preparing the university for the faculty of the future. In particular, we will emphasize diversity, equity, and inclusion in hiring and promotion practices, the acknowledgement and encouragement of community-engaged scholarship and emerging models of review and dissemination of scholarship, and communicating the roles of the UW as a public good.
- The academic enterprise and its implications: A number of complex and interrelated issues surround how we educate, and the ways in which decisions around curriculum impact, and are impacted by, budgetary and other considerations. This year, the Activity Based Budgeting system will be under review, proposals around enrollment management strategies will likely arise, as will ideas to help our undergraduate students find their academic home at our huge and diverse and sometimes bewildering university. We also will be strengthening the foundations for our processes of discussion and decision-making around courses and programs, including Senate legislation on a number of academic policies through the course of the year.
- Dispute resolution: Our current systems for resolving disputes involving faculty are long past due for revision, and a multi-year effort to design a modern, sustainable system incorporating mechanisms for early intervention, at multiple levels, with opportunities for grace, will yield revisions to the Faculty Code for consideration this year.
- The evaluation of teaching: A task force made up of members of several of our faculty councils has begun work on re-envisioning the methods by which our teaching is assessed, by our peers, our students, and ourselves, and we look forward to their report and recommendations later this year.
- Instructional faculty: Building on the work over the last several years by the administration and the Senate, legislation should be forthcoming to reconsider titles for instructional faculty.

There is much more: participation in the UW Libraries' negotiations with Elsevier, the ongoing financial transformation project, a major campus climate survey, our usual oversight on budgeting and planning and a wide variety of other matters, and, of course, the expectedly unexpected asteroid that will inevitably occur at some point.

All this work is made possible as a result of our strong and vibrant system of shared governance. This is rooted in our productive relationships with the university administration, and based on the hard work of a large number of faculty who dedicate precious time to serving on a wide variety of councils, committees and groups at all levels from departmental to university-wide, and we are always looking for new people to help out and add their voices to the mix. Because that is what we do – provide the faculty voice and advocate for the welfare of the faculty and in turn the university overall.

By my count, I am the 72nd chair of the Faculty Senate, a legacy that reaches back almost half the life of the university. I am the first chair from the Information School, where I have proudly served for over 20 years; the UW has been very good to me and to the iSchool, and I am delighted to partially repay that debt by my service to the Senate this year. And, so far as I know, I am the second openly gay chair. I remark on that because it is almost wholly unremarkable, which speaks to the progress that has been made on a number of fronts – and a reminder that there is always progress to be made.

In a time of division, mistrust, anxiety, and fear, the joint prospects of access and excellence, as articulated by our university's leadership, hold out the promise for positive change, driven by creative and diverse inquiry and exploration, and channeled through innovative and caring education. With compassion, kindness, and resolve, I hope our collective efforts help our university fully realize that vision.
