Feel the power of thundering Victoria Falls. In 1580, English navigator Sir Frances Drake and his crew observed the falls and named them “Virginia Falls” after England’s queen, Elizabeth. These magnificent cascades were later named Victoria Falls in honor of Queen Victoria. Today, Victoria Falls is a UNESCO World Heritage Site and a wonder of the natural world. The falls are fed by the Zambezi River, which flows more than 1,700 miles from its source in the highlands of Victoria Falls, Zambia, to the Indian Ocean. The river’s power creates a misty veil that rises 1,200 feet, forming one of the world’s largest waterfalls.

Botswana and Zimbabwe are the most remote and least populated countries in southern Africa, providing unparalleled opportunities for wildlife observation. Today, tourists can marvel at this natural wonder on a planned visit to Victoria Falls, the world’s largest sheet of water, which plummets 1,085 feet over a mile-long rift.
